For our Eisteddfod, the following genres are defined as (taken from Dance Adjudicator's Genre List from AESA):

Contemporary

The contemporary genre has evolved over the last 100 years and there are certain styles of contemporary that teachers can research such as Cunningham, Graham, Limón and Rambert. The choreography will depend on the choreographer's intent and purpose. It could include the use of motif and great use of the space. On the other hand the choreographer's intent maybe to use only minimal space to explore the music via movement and this is also a valid work. The use of technique should/could include use of centre, off centre, falling, running, suspension, articulation of spine and limbs, release of the whole spine when hanging over, use of safety foot getting in and out of the floor, range of levels including floor work. The choreography should not include typical steps from other genre such as classical ballet, jazz, acro etc.

Neo-classical/Lyrical

Closely linked to classical ballet, this genre is a section where emotion and expression is closely linked to the performance and particularly the music. Music may be instrumental or with lyrics. Good flow and continuity through the music is expected together with great control of adagio type movements.

Song and Dance (both song and tap, song and soft shoe)

Where both dance and vocals are combined. Students will both sing and dance and an even length of both is expected. The story of the song should be carried through to the dance and storyline maintained through both song and dance.
